□ Established in 1988 by French and German lawyers who shared the same professional outlook, the firm Breitenstein Meillassoux Hauser has been recognised as an independent law firm with a European vocation. BMHavocats : Provides legal advice and assistance for French-German business relationships. Extends its practice to other European countries. Specialises in intellectual property, Information Technology law. Our lawyers are European both culturally and by training - some are qualified to practice in France, Germany and New York - and we are well equipped to handle this permanent challenge. Lawyers joining the firm, specialising in corporate law, have strengthened BMHavocats' competence in Mergers and Acquisitions as well as in European and international business law. Approximately twenty lawyers, including six partners, currently work at BMHavocats.

Founded in 1980, DML is a management consulting firm specialized in assisting its clients to prepare and implement the restructuring of their operations, including manufacturing sites, logistical centers, sales & marketing organizations and support functions.

We have offices in Boston, Paris, London, Tokyo and Barcelona.

We can assist our clients throughout the restructuring process:

- risk analysis, definition of the implementation process
- preparation of the various prerequisites to the announcement and legal procedures (economic justification, social measures, communication / Lobbying)
- management of the consultation procedures
- assistance in the negotiations / crisis management
- search for solutions to minimize the social impact (job creation, plant conversion, outsourcing, turnaround/divestment).

United States and French Individual Income Tax Consulting

Horton Tax Services SARL (HTS) delivers high quality, service-oriented tax services to Americans in Paris. HTS was founded in January 2006 when HTS acquired the practice of Richard Van Ham & Associés. Van Ham & Associés had provided tax services in Paris since 1982.

Our personalized approach to individual tax compliance is welcomed by American executives who lack the time and patience to interface with cumbersome "tax organizers" which are a mandatory component of "Big Four" compliance programs.

□ The Institut Aspen France, founded in 1983, is an independent, non-partisan, non-profit, international center for discussion and dialogue. It is affiliated with the Aspen Institute and is part of an international network (USA, Berlin, India, Italy, Japan, Romania). It has been located in Lyon since 1994. Through international conferences, seminars, leadership programs, and various meetings covering the main political, economic and societal issues of our times, it helps leaders from the economic, political, academic, and non-profit sectors to better identify the challenges they must face and it facilitates, in an informal context, the meeting of leaders from different geographical, cultural and professional worlds.

The InterContinental Paris Le Grand Hotel, located directly opposite the Opera House, is an oasis of calm right in the heart of the city. Opened during the reign of Napoleon III, this hotel has been entirely renovated and now offers services that meet modern requirements with an authentic second empire French setting - a unique concept in Paris. The hotel offers 470 fully renovated guest-rooms and 25,000 square feet (2.200 m²) of meeting space.

☐ The aim of KidSwing is to establish Golf as an innovative form of therapy for physically challenged children. Mr. Anthony Netto, professional Golfer, coach of the German National Team of Physically Challenged Golfers, and in a wheelchair himself, is initiator and head of KidSwing. The programme was launched in 2002 in Germany, where so far 8 KidSwing bases have been set up. KidSwing has proven itself to be a very successful method of rehabilitation, social integration and fun. To make this fabulous therapy available to more children, we want to install training centers internationally. (<http://www.kidswing.fr>)

☐ Mazars is an international, integrated and independent organization, specializing in audit, accounting, tax and advisory services, including a large expertise in risk management and internal control. Mazars can rely on the skills of 15,000 professionals operating in 55 countries. As the market challenger, Mazars is fully able to provide large corporate multinational firms with seamless tailored solutions. Its complete, adaptable and flexible range of services also makes Mazars perfectly able to serve smaller companies and owner-managed businesses as well as high net worth individuals. The group is also proud to take a part of the launch of the new worldwide alliance: Praxity. This alliance allows the group to accelerate and extend its delivery capability. Praxity offers new possibilities for co-operation and allows Mazars to provide a more global service offering for large companies.

Since 1974, Printronix Inc. has created innovative printing solutions for the industrial marketplace and supply chain. The company is the worldwide market leader in enterprise solutions for line matrix printing and has earned an outstanding reputation for its high-performance thermal and fanfold laser printing solutions. Printronix also has become an established leader in pioneering technologies, including bar code compliance and networked printer management. Expert at adapting new technologies to create innovative programs, the company offers the next generation of RFID products and services. Printronix's RFID Smart technology solutions fast track RFID adoption and unblock implementation barriers IT professionals face. Printronix's integrated network programs, such as Online Data Validation (ODV) and PrintNet Enterprise, improve the printing of bar codes, labels and forms while verifying accuracy and offering flawless diagnostic technology. Headquartered in Irvine, California, Printronix provides market coverage across the globe, with manufacturing facilities and sales and support locations that serve users in the Americas, Europe, the Middle-East, Africa and Asia Pacific. Transnational Business Development and Strategic Consulting TBD Partners (TBD) operate from Washington DC and London and provide transnational business development services for clients in a variety of industries.

We use the term "business development" to describe both the traditional ongoing services required by clients to increase their revenues and expand their customer base as well as the creative services required for unique strategic solutions such as joint ventures, special purpose vehicles (SPVs) business/asset acquisitions or disposals, alliances or other one-off transactions.

We can be involved in "starting up" or expanding client operations. For clients that want to increase their base of business and international sales reach, TBD offers a range of business development services including acting as a reseller or distributor of the client's products and services, helping the client establish sales channel networks, establishing a "remote office" on behalf of the client, providing consulting and/or implementation services, providing a temporary or transitional management team.

CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM
NAICS

Structure of NAICS

The structure of NAICS is hierarchical, much like that of the 1987 SIC. The first two digits of the structure designate the NAICS sectors that represent general categories of economic activities. NAICS classifies all economic activities into 20 sectors. The NAICS sectors, their two-digit codes, and the distinguishing activities of each are :

11 Agriculture, Forestry, Fishing and Hunting – Activities of this sector are growing crops, raising animals, harvesting timber, and harvesting fish and other animals from farms, ranches, or the animals' natural habitats.

21 Mining – Activities of this sector are extracting naturally occurring mineral solids, such as coal and ore ; liquid minerals, such as crude petroleum ; and gases, such as natural gas ; and beneficiating (e.g. crushing, screening, washing, and flotation) and other preparation at the mine site, or as part of mining activity.

22 Utilities – Activities of this sector are generating, transmitting, and/or distributing electricity, gas, steam, and water and removing sewage through a permanent infrastructure of lines, mains, and pipe.

23 Construction – Activities of this sector are erecting buildings and other structures (including additions) ; heavy construction other than buildings ; and alterations, reconstruction, installation, and maintenance and repairs.

31-33 Manufacturing – Activities of this sector are the mechanical, physical, or chemical transformation of material, substances, or components into new products.

41-43 Wholesale Trade – Activities of this sector are selling or arranging for the purchase or sale of goods for resale ; capital or durable nonconsumer goods ; and raw and intermediate materials and supplies used in production, and providing services incidental to the sale of the merchandise.

44-46 Retail Trade – Activities of this sector are retailing merchandise generally in small quantities to the general public and providing services incidental to the sale of the merchandise.

48-49 Transportation and Warehousing – Activities of this sector are providing transportation of passengers and cargo, warehousing and storing goods, scenic and sightseeing transportation, and supporting these activities.

51 Information – Activities of this sector are distributing information and cultural products, providing the means to transmit or distribute these products as data or communications, and processing data.

52 Finance and Insurance – Activities of this sector involve the creation, liquidation, or change in ownership of financial assets (financial transactions) and/or facilitating financial transactions.

53 Real Estate and Rental and Leasing – Activities of this sector are renting, leasing, or otherwise allowing the use of tangible or intangible assets (except copyrighted works), and providing related services.

54 Professional, Scientific, and Technical Services – Activities of this sector are performing professional, scientific, and technical services for the operations of other organizations.

55 Management of Companies and Enterprises – Activities of this sector are the holding of securities of companies and enterprises, for the purpose of owning controlling interest or influencing their management decision, or administering, overseeing, and managing other establishments of the same company or enterprise and normally undertaking the strategic or organizational planning and decisionmaking of the company or enterprise.

56 Administrative and Support and Waste Management and Remediation Services – Activities of this sector are performing routine support activities for the day-to-day operations of other organizations.

61 Educational Services – Activities of this sector are providing instruction and training in a wide variety of subjects.

62 Health Care and Social Assistance – Activities of this sector are providing health care and social assistance for individuals.

71 Arts, Entertainment, and Recreation – Activities of this sector are operating or providing services to meet varied cultural, entertainment, and recreational interests of their patrons.

72 Accommodation and Food Services – Activities of this sector are providing customers with lodging and/or preparing meals, snacks, and beverages for immediate consumption.

81 Other Services (except Public Administration) – Activities of this sector are providing services not elsewhere specified, including repairs, religious activities, grantmaking, advocacy, laundry, personal care, death care, and other personal services.

91-93 Public Administration – Activities of this sector are administration, management, and oversight of public programs by Federal, State, and local governments.

Doing Business In France

(In cooperation with the Foreign Commercial Service of the U.S. Embassy Paris)

Market Overview

France and the U.S. are long-standing, close allies. Despite occasional differences of views, the U.S. and France work together on a broad range of trade, security and geopolitical issues. France is the world's sixth largest economy, with an annual GDP (USD 2.0 trillion in 2005), about one-fifth that of the United States. France's population of 63 million people has a high disposable income of USD 33,855 per capita. In 2005, French GDP grew by 1.4 percent in real terms. GDP in 2006 grew at about an estimated 2.1 percent, the best in several years. The outlook for is continued modest growth. Inflation remains low and under control at 1.7 percent for 2006.

The French economy continues to struggle to grow at its potential, estimated at 2.3 percent per year. Sustaining growth at that rate will require further deregulation and reduction of the role of the state in the economy. France has a tradition of highly centralized administrative oversight of its essentially market-based economy. Total general government outlays amount to about 54 percent of GDP, one of the highest ratios among OECD countries. The GOF succeeded in reducing its budget deficit in 2006, but needs to sustain that effort and also overcome public sector employees' resistance to pension reform and decentralization initiatives. The introduction of the euro and advancing globalization have increased competitive pressures on French companies and the French economy. Analysts, including those in the GOF, cite continued weak investment as evidence of the need to increase competitiveness through reforms, including further corporate tax cuts, simplification of administrative procedures, loosening of the highly inflexible labor market, and increased research and innovation.

Widely publicized riots in the fall of 2005 in the suburbs of major French cities and student demonstrations in the spring of 2006 have increased the stakes and led to a number of proposals to fight unemployment, especially among youths, but have also highlighted the difficulties in reforming labor laws and integrating earlier waves of immigrants. Some progress, though partially through government employment programs, has been achieved, with unemployment having fallen to 8.6 percent at year-end 2006 from 10 percent in June 2005, but obviously more needs to be done.

Ensuring that France's investment climate is attractive to foreign investors is a priority for the French government, which sees foreign investment as a way to create durable jobs and stimulate growth. Investment regulations are simple, and a range of financial incentives for foreign investors is available. Foreign investors say they are attracted to France by its skilled and productive labor force; its central location in Europe with its free movement of people, services, capital and goods (aided by the euro); good infrastructure; and its technology-oriented society. However, investors must contend with extensive government economic regulation and taxation, high social costs and a complex labor environment. Highly developed employee rights and benefits can make exit costs high for investors seeking to leave France.

Market Opportunities

Leading non-agricultural products considered to offer "best prospects" for U.S. business in France are (in order of market size): Aircraft and Parts, Computer Services, Computer Software, Industrial Chemicals, Travel and Tourism, Safety and Security Equipment, Computer and Peripherals, Telecommunications Equipment, Books & Publishing, Water Resources Equipment and Services, Medical Equipment, Automotive Parts Equipment, Telecommunications Services, Plastics, Agricultural Machinery and Equipment, Construction Equipment, Cosmetics, Education Services, Textile, Direct Marketing and E-Commerce Business to Consumer.

In general, the commercial environment in France is favorable for sales of U.S. goods and services. Marketing products and services in France is similar to the approach in the U.S., notwithstanding some significant differences in cultural factors and certain legal and regulatory restrictions. Local partners are readily available in most sectors and product lines, although competition can be fierce.

Selling U.S. Products and Services

Considering the host of distribution options available in France, the exporter must carefully select the method best suited to his or her product. French buyers generally prefer to purchase through an intermediary, making sales directly to the end-user uncommon. However, sales of expensive, technically sophisticated goods are an exception to this rule.

Intermediaries may take one of three primary forms under French law: Distributor, Agent or Salaried Representative

Using an Agent or Distributor

Companies wishing to use distribution, franchising and agency arrangements need to ensure that the agreements they put into place are in accordance with EU and Member State national laws. Council Directive 86/653/EEC establishes certain minimum standards of protection for self-employed commercial agents who sell or purchase goods on behalf of their principals. In essence, the Directive establishes the rights and obligations of the principal and its agents; the agent's remuneration; and the conclusion and termination of an agency contract, including the notice to be given and indemnity or compensation to be paid to the agent. U.S. companies particularly should be aware that the Directive states that parties may not derogate certain requirements. Accordingly, the inclusion of a clause specifying an alternate body of law to be applied in the event of a dispute will likely be ruled invalid by European courts.

Distributor:

A distributor (concessionnaire) is an individual or legal entity who purchases goods directly from a producer for the purpose of resale. The distributor operates independently and is only bound by the written provisions of the distribution agreement. These agreements, however, are subject to specific rules and regulations regarding exclusive distribution and price setting.

Contract termination conditions are important, and vary with the type of distribution agreement. Either party without prior notification or indemnification may terminate a distribution agreement of specified duration at the end of the contract period. If the termination takes place before the end of the contract period, the terminating party may be sued for breach of contract. Either party may terminate a distribution agreement with an unspecified duration without indemnification after a fair notice period, usually six months. Termination by the supplier without fair notice may be grounds for damage claims by the distributor.

Agent:

This category covers commercial agents and those acting as agents but not fulfilling the requisites for commercial agent status. Unlike distributors, agents do not actually purchase goods for resale; instead, they match up buyers and sellers on a commission basis. All agents exercise their activities in an independent manner, and their principals are exempt from payment of payroll taxes. Agents assume their own fiscal charges (business license tax and value-added tax) and social charges (health insurance, social security and retirement/pension benefits).

Commercial Agent:

Agents with a written contract have the status of commercial agents (agents commerciaux) if they exercise their activity as a sustained independent profession and fulfill the following conditions:

- Do not have a written employment contract;
- Negotiate sales and purchases on behalf of producers, manufacturers, or dealers;
- Are registered with the Tribunal of Commerce as commercial agents.

A commercial agent is independent and free to act on the behalf of any other firm. However, in the case where the agent wishes to represent one of his or her principal's competitors, consent of the principal must first be secured. The principal may justifiably terminate the commercial agent contract only if the agent shows substantial deficiency in carrying out his or her obligations. Otherwise, contract termination gives the agent a right to indemnification, often equal to two years' commissions, in absence of a termination date in the agreement.

Other agents: Persons who do not fulfill all the requirements for commercial agency, and who are not in a position of subordination to the company they represent, are considered agents. A notarized act or private agreement can effect authorization of an agent. Either party may terminate the agency agreement at will, but the non-terminating party has a right to indemnification of losses.

Salaried Representatives:

Unlike agents, salaried representatives have employment contracts. They and their employers share the burden of payroll taxes contributing to social security, unemployment compensation, and retirement/pension plans.

Statutory Representatives:

Persons are considered statutory representatives if they exercise their activity as a sustained, independent profession and fulfill the following conditions:

- Act as sales representative for the account of one or more employers;
- Abstain from executing commercial operations on their own behalf;
- Institute mutual commitments with employers on the nature of goods or services offered for sale, the region of activity or the category of clients, and the rate of compensation.

Statutory representatives work according to their employers' instructions and are protected by labor law, but they have a special right to indemnification if unjustly terminated. This indemnity is based on the size and importance of the clientele they create.

Non-statutory Salaried Representatives:

Representatives who are subordinate to their employers and who do not fulfill the requisites for statutory representative status fall into a separate category and are considered regular employees.

Establishing an Office

Establishing a subsidiary/branch office in France is also advisable for some industries. The French government encourages the formation of new enterprises. In conjunction with the Paris Chamber of Commerce and other Chambers throughout the country, the French government offers extensive counseling and assistance in setting up an office in France. Detailed "how to" guides are available from the various chambers of commerce, and also from the Commercial Service and the numerous American consulting firms present in France.

Franchising

The French franchise sector ranks first in Europe in sales, and has enjoyed 11 percent average growth over the last three years. Although very competitive, it offers many opportunities for innovative U.S. franchises. Ten percent of franchises operating in France are foreign, of which 40 percent are American. In January 2006 total franchising sales were estimated at 43.00 billion. Potential remains for U.S. franchisers in sub-sectors yet to be fully exploited, such as personal service, i.e. household duties, school tutoring, child or senior care, renovation services, etc. However, it is important to note that the traditional Master Franchise approach has not proven very successful in France, while other expansion methods (direct investment or flexible master franchise) seem to work better.

Direct Marketing

There is a wide range of EU legislation that impacts the direct marketing sector. Compliance requirements are stiffest for marketing and sales to private consumers. Companies need to focus, in particular, on the clarity and completeness of the information they provide to consumers prior to purchase, and on their approaches to collecting and using customer data. The following gives a brief overview of the most important provisions flowing from EU-wide rules on data protection, distance selling and on-line commerce.

Processing Customer Data

The EU's general data protection Directive (95/46/EC) spells out strict rules concerning the processing of personal data. Businesses must tell consumers that they are collecting data, what they intend to use it for, and to whom it will be disclosed. Data subjects must be given the opportunity to object to the processing of their personal details and to opt-out of having them used for direct marketing purposes. This opt-out should be available at the time of collection and at any point thereafter. This general legislation is supplemented by specific rules set out in the "Directive on the processing of personal data and the protection of privacy in the electronic communications sector" (2002/58/EC). This requires companies to secure the prior consent of consumers before sending them marketing emails. The only exception to this opt-in provision is if the marketer has already obtained the intended recipient's contact details in the context of a previous sale and wishes to send them information on similar products and services.

Transferring Customer Data to Countries Outside the EU

The EU's general data protection Directive provides for the free flow of personal data within the EU but also for its protection when it leaves the region's borders. Personal data can only be transferred outside the EU if adequate protection is provided for it or if the unambiguous consent of the data subject is secured. The European Commission has decided that a handful of countries have regulatory frameworks in place that guarantee the adequate protection of data transferred to them – the United States is not one.

The Department of Commerce and the European Commission negotiated Safe Harbor to provide U.S. companies with a simple, streamlined means of complying with the adequacy requirement. It allows those U.S. companies that commit to a series of data protection principles (based on the Directive), and who publicly state that commitment by "self-certifying" on a dedicated website, to continue to receive personal data from the EU. Signing up is voluntary but the rules are binding on those who do. The ultimate means of enforcing Safe Harbor is that failure to fulfill the commitments will be actionable as an unfair and deceptive practice under Section 5 of the FTC Act or under a concurrent Department of Transportation statute for air carriers and ticket agents. While the United States as a whole does not enjoy an adequacy finding, companies that join up to the Safe Harbor scheme will.

EU based exporters or U.S. based importers of personal data can also satisfy the adequacy requirement by including data privacy clauses in the contracts they sign with each other. The Data Protection Authority in the EU country from where the data is being exported must approve these contracts. To fast track this procedure the European Commission has approved sets of model clauses for personal data transfers that can be inserted into contracts between data importers and exporters. The most recent were published at the beginning of 2005. Most transfers using contracts based on these model clauses do not require prior approval. Companies must bear in mind that the transfer of personal data to third countries is a processing operation that is subject to the general data protection Directive regardless of any Safe Harbor, contractual or consent arrangements.

Distance Selling Rules

The EU's Directive on distance selling to consumers (97/7/EC) set out a number of obligations for companies doing business at a distance with consumers. It can read like a set of onerous "do's" and "don'ts," but in many ways it represents nothing more than a customer relations good practice guide with legal effect. Direct marketers must provide clear information on the identity of themselves as well as their supplier, full details on prices including delivery costs, and the period for which an offer remains valid – all of this, of course, before a contract is concluded. Customers generally have the right to return goods without any required explanation within seven days, and retain the right to compensation for faulty goods thereafter.

Similar in nature is the Doorstep Directive (85/577/EEC) which is designed to protect consumers from sales occurring outside of a normal business premises (e.g., door-to-door sales) and essentially assure the fairness of resulting contracts.

Financial services are the subject of a separate Directive that came into force in June 2002 (2002/65/EC). This piece of legislation amends three prior existing Directives and is designed to ensure that consumers are appropriately protected in respect to financial transactions taking place where the consumer and the provider are not face-to-face. In addition to prohibiting certain abusive marketing practices, the Directive establishes criteria for the presentation of contract information. Given the special nature of financial markets, specifics are also laid out for contractual withdrawal.

Direct Marketing Over the Internet

The e-commerce Directive (2000/31/EC) imposes certain specific requirements connected to the direct marketing business. Promotional offers must not mislead customers and the terms that must be met to qualify for them have to be easily accessible and clear. The Directive stipulates that marketing e-mails must be identified as such to the recipient and requires that companies targeting customers on-line must regularly consult national opt-out registers where they exist. When an order is placed, the service provider must acknowledge receipt quickly and by electronic means, although the Directive does not attribute any legal effect to the placing of an order or its acknowledgment. This is a matter for national law. Vendors of electronically supplied services must also collect value added tax (VAT).

The French direct marketing market for consumer products and services is one of the largest in the world. This market represents 5 percent of the non-food retail business. It accounted for USD 17.50 billion (Euro 14 billion) in 2005, growing 18 percent. Sales through the mail have trended downward in recent years just as telephone and specifically Internet sales have rapidly expanded. Internet sales represent 62 percent of total direct marketing sales. In 2005, 76 percent of French households bought through direct marketing with an average annual purchase of USD 700. Textile products make up 43 percent of direct sales, books and records 31 percent, and high-tech products 17 percent. B-to-B direct marketing sales account for USD 4.4 billion.

Joint Ventures/Licensing

Joint venture with a French firm is one recommended approach. The French government encourages this type of investment and offers a wide range of incentives. Traditionally, a French joint venture partner strengthens the marketing activities of an American firm with its in-place distribution system. In certain industries, French manufacturers have skills that supplement those of the American partner. A joint venture with a French firm that has full French government support can be beneficial as long as manufacturing decisions can be made independently of government involvement. Recognizing the differences in each market is essential for success. It is recommended that companies interested in forming joint ventures consult with the U.S. Commercial Service at the Embassy in Paris before making any alliances.

Selling to the Government

The EU public procurement market, including EU institutions and Member States, totals around EUR 1,600 billion per year. This market is regulated by two EU Directives which apply for contracts above certain agreed thresholds. Under the agreed thresholds, each EU Member State has developed its own procurement law, which is not regulated by the EU public procurement Directives, although the general principles of the EU Treaty regarding non-discrimination and free movement of goods apply even below the thresholds. The two EU public procurement Directives are: Directive 2004/18 on Coordination of procedures for the award of public works, services and supplies contracts, and Directive 2004/17 on Coordination of procedures of entities operating in the Utilities sector, which covers water, energy, transport and postal services. Those Directives are implemented in each EU Member State's national procurement legislation. Two Remedies Directives outline the procedures that EU Member States ought to put in place in case of violation of the EU public procurement law: Directive 89/665 on the "Coordination of the laws, Regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts" for the classic sectors, and Directive 92/13 for remedies in the utilities sector.

Most tenders from European public contracting authorities for public supplies whose value is above the agreed thresholds are open to U.S.-based companies by virtue of the WTO Government Procurement Agreement (GPA). The GPA allows U.S. firms to bid on all supplies and services and some construction works contracts above thresholds contracted by EU central public contracting authorities. However, there are restrictions for U.S. suppliers in the utilities sector both in the EU Utilities Directive and in the EU coverage of the GPA. The Utilities Directive allows EU contracting authorities in these sectors to either reject non-EU bids where the proportion of goods originating in non-EU countries exceeds 50% of the total value of the goods constituting the tender, or are entitled to apply a 3% price difference to non-EU bids in order to give preference to the EU bid. These restrictions are applied when no reciprocal access for EU companies in the U.S. market is offered.

The French Government generally follows EU procurement regulations, which call for non-discrimination against foreign firms. In France, procurement regulations do not usually present barriers to entry for foreign firms. However, local political pressure and administrative procedures are often said to favor French companies. French Government procurement comes under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of the Economy and Finance. The "Commission Centrale des Marches" (CCM), or Central Procurement Board, has overall responsibility for monitoring compliance with procurement regulations.

France is obliged to follow EU public works regulations requiring government purchasing entities to publish tender notices for all public works projects valued at over Euro 5.270 million, or approximately USD 6.535 million. Tender notices exceeding this must be published in the Official Journal of the European Union, as well as in the French "Bulletin Officiel des Annonces des Marches Publics." In telecommunications, however, a European Union Utilities Directive requires France to give EU bidders a three percent price preference and gives France the option to reject bids with over 50 percent non-EU content. Certain defense-related industries are also excluded from regular procurement rules. In addition, public projects must conform to the following requirements:

- A minimum of 52 days is required for bid submissions after an offer is announced.
- The reason for a bid's rejection must be provided upon request.
- The amount of the winning bids must be publicly disclosed.

Distribution and Sales Channels

The Retail Network:

France possesses a diverse and comprehensive retail network, which increasingly resembles that of the U.S. From the largest department store chains to the smallest individual proprietorships, French distribution channels are demonstrating some significant new trends that could affect how products are sold in France.

Small-and medium-sized family-owned firms, which traditionally accounted for a majority of French wholesale and retail trade, are rapidly losing ground to hypermarkets - large retail outlets carrying a wide variety of products at discounted prices. At the same time, mail order marketing, Internet sales, and specialized chain stores have shown strong growth. On the other hand, a law limits the amount of retail space that can be purchased or leased commercially, with a special exemption required for space greater than 300 square meters (one square meter equals about 10.5 square feet).

French food retailers fall under six principal formats: hard-discounts, hypermarkets, supermarkets, city center stores, department stores and traditional outlets. The first five account for 75 percent of the country's food distribution; the sixth, which includes neighborhood and specialized food stores, for about 25 percent.

Developments in recent years have altered the country's retail food distribution system. First, France passed legislation limiting the number of hypermarket/supermarket openings. While the new law has limited the number of new establishments, it has prompted hyper/supermarkets to expand their existing surface areas. Second, mergers and alliances among major hyper/supermarkets have allied the country's 7 largest retailers with five central buying offices. In 1999, Carrefour and Promodes merged, creating the world's largest retail chain after Wal-Mart.

With an eye to capturing market share from the restaurant and fast-food sectors, hyper/supermarkets began to sell ready-to-eat products such as roasted meats (cooked chicken, etc.), fresh-baked bread, and pastries. They also focus on premium quality food including regional and exotic products, and have also developed various lines of discounted products to react to the severe competition of hard discounters that have been gaining market share over the past few years.

Electronic Commerce

In July 2003, the European Union (EU) started applying Value Added Tax (VAT) to sales by non-EU based companies of Electronically Supplied Services (ESS) to EU based non-business customers. U.S. companies that are covered by the rule change must collect and submit VAT to EU tax authorities. European Council Directive 2002/38/EC changed the EU rules for charging Value Added Tax. U.S. businesses mainly affected by this rule change are those that are U.S. based and selling ESS to EU based, non-business customers or those businesses that are EU based and selling ESS to customers outside the EU who no longer need to charge VAT on these transactions.

There are a number of compliance options for businesses. The Directive created a special scheme that simplifies registering with each Member State. The Directive allows companies to register with a single VAT authority of their choice. Companies have to charge different rates of VAT according to where their customers are based but VAT reports and returns are submitted to just one authority. The VAT authority responsible for providing the single point of registration service is then responsible for reallocating the collected revenue among the other EU VAT authorities.

Direct Internet marketing is booming in France. Product and services sales, as well as the number of web sites on the Internet, have increased dramatically in recent years. Retail online sales estimates (Business-to-Consumer) in 2005 were USD 10.8 billion (8.70 Billion Euros) and accounted for 62 percent of total direct marketing sales. The categories of products reporting the best market share in 2005 are consumer electronics; computers, cameras, mobile phones (up 45 percent); and cultural products; books, CDs, DVD's (up 48 percent). Internet sales increased by 53 percent in 2005. The number of Internet users in France has increased dramatically and in 2006 over 15 million people bought online, a 15 percent increase over 2005.

Trade Promotion and Advertising

Misleading advertising is defined as any "advertising which in any way, including its presentation, deceives or is likely to deceive the persons to whom it is addressed or whom it reaches and which, by reason of its deceptive nature, is likely to affect their economic behavior or which for those reasons, injures or is likely to injure a competitor." Member States can authorize even more extensive protection under their national laws. Comparative advertising, subject to certain conditions, is defined as "advertising which explicitly or by implication identifies a competitor or goods or services by a competitor." Member States can, and in some cases have, restricted misleading or comparative advertising.

The EU's Television without Frontiers Directive lays down legislation on broadcasting activities allowed within the EU. It is currently being reviewed to adapt to advances in internet, mobile phones and digital TV technologies. It partially lifts Regulations on advertising and product placement and proposes to ban advertising to children of food and drink. The new rules should be adopted in 2007.

Following the adoption of the 1999 Council Directive on the Sale of Consumer Goods and Associated Guarantees, product specifications, as laid down in advertising, are now considered as legally binding on the seller. (For additional information on Council Directive 1999/44/EC on the Sale of Consumer Goods and Associated Guarantees, see the legal warranties and after-sales service section of 4.4, below.)

The EU adopted Directive 2005/29/EC concerning fair business practices in a further attempt to tighten up consumer protection rules. These new rules will outlaw several aggressive or deceptive marketing practices such as pyramid schemes, "liquidation sales" when a shop is not closing down, and artificially high prices as the basis for discounts in addition to other potentially misleading advertising practices. Certain rules on advertising to children are also set out.

Advertising can also be done through many different media, including TV, radio or newspapers and magazines. There are far too many newspapers, magazines and technical journals to list. Please check the following website for media lists, under "audiovisuel" for TV and radio, and under "presse écrite" for newspapers and magazines: It should be noted that newspapers do not carry nearly the volume of advertising to which Americans are accustomed. In addition, mass media advertising (press, TV, radio, billboards) represents 35 percent of total promotional spending while direct marketing, promotion, event advertising, public relations, guides and catalogs represent 65 percent of the total French market for advertising services.

Judicious use of the media is an important part of any and all promotional programs. Below is a list of the most prominent general circulation French newspapers and magazines:

Pricing

The U.S. exporter can usually determine the export price of his/her manufactured product using 70 percent of the domestic price (after deduction of all local marketing costs). This allows the French importer to price imports from the U.S. on the same price level as an American counterpart. A simple way to compare U.S. and French retail prices consists of taking the net U.S. retail price and comparing it with the French retail price without the Value Added Tax (V.A.T.), currently 19.6 percent. The French consumer is generally willing to pay a maximum of 10-15 percent over the American retail price. When determining the export price, it is important to consider that if prices are FOB, the French importer will have to pay for transportation, insurance, customs duties, value-added tax and fixed fees per shipment.

Terms of Payment:

For U.S. exporters, what is called "the financing of export sales" is not basically different from financing domestic sales. The fundamental concern in both cases is that one be paid in a timely manner for the goods and/or services delivered. France's modern banking system offers a full range of payment means, the most significant of which are:

- Commercial letters of credit
- Sight and time drafts (documentary collections)
- Bank transfers
- Certified checks

Although bank transfers and certified checks are fairly self-explanatory methods of payment, commercial letters of credit and sight and time drafts may be less familiar to the would-be exporter but are potentially attractive terms of payment.

Sales Service/Customer Support

Conscious of the discrepancies among Member States in product labeling, language use, legal guarantee, and liability, the redress of which inevitably frustrates consumers in cross-border shopping, the EU institutions have launched a number of initiatives aimed at harmonizing national legislation. Suppliers within and outside the EU should be aware of existing and upcoming legislation affecting sales, service, and customer support.

Although less developed than in the U.S., French businesses also provide all kinds of services such as after-sales service, home delivery, maintenance contracts, warehousing facilities, hot-lines, or toll free numbers for any technical assistance. For some products such as electrical appliances, e.g. TV, replacement service is available.

Local Professional Services

A wide variety of service providers is available to support U.S. companies doing business in the European Union (EU), from the largest global firms to small niche players. The U.S. Commercial Service EU website (see below) lists various professional service providers and additional information is available upon request.

A lawyer with experience in France should be retained as soon as the establishment of a French business entity is contemplated. The American Embassy in Paris maintains a list of American lawyers practicing in France, which is available upon request. More detailed information about professional backgrounds can be obtained from the Martindale-Hubbell Law Directory and from the Bar Register of Pre-eminent Lawyers. Lawyers and bankers in the United States also will normally have means of recommending lawyers in France.

France has two major categories of legal practitioners:

Avocats: An "avocat" must be a lawyer. "Avocats" may render legal advice on all matters, draft agreements and contracts, handle commercial disputes and collection cases, and plead and defend civil and criminal cases before the French courts to which they are admitted. See contacts at:

[<http://www.amb-usa.fr/consul/acs/guide/Attorneys.pdf>]

Notaries (Notaires): A French "notaire" is a public official appointed by the Ministry of Justice. He is not the equivalent of a public notary in the United States. The number of "notaires" in each jurisdiction is limited, and their fees fixed by law. Their functions include the preparation and recording of notarial acts (e.g., wills, deeds, acts of incorporation, marriage, contracts), the administration and settlements of estates (excluding litigation in court) and serving as the repository of wills. They are not lawyers, but very specialized members of the legal profession. They may not litigate in courts.

Trade Regulations and Standards

Import Tariffs

Member states of the European Union have established a Community Integrated Tariff (TARIC) system, where duties are applied to imports from non-EU countries. TARIC was established by the 1958 Treaty of Rome as part of the European Economic Community (EEC). The Uruguay Round has reinforced the Single Market program. It focuses on the consolidation of an integrated European market, rather than on developing new policy directions. There are combined bilateral, regional, and multilateral policies.

Duties levied on imports from non-EU countries, including the United States, are moderate. Most raw materials enter duty-free or at low rates, most manufactured goods are subject to rates between 5 and 17 percent. Most agricultural product imports are covered by the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP), subjecting many items to varied levies designed to equalize the prices of imported commodities with those produced in the EU. Agricultural products are strictly regulated based on EU and French standards.

The EU tariff schedule is based on the Customs Cooperation Council Nomenclature (CCCN), which is also referred to as the Harmonized System. This system was introduced to provide a standard tariff classification regime for all products imported and exported throughout the world. Agriculture has high import tariffs in order to maintain a strict regime of what type of produce and meat are accepted into the EU. Hormone-treated beef continues to be banned by the EU despite WTO rulings that the ban violates international trade agreements. The decreasing average for industrial manufacturing goods is expected to be around 3 per cent over the next few years.

Trade Barriers

The following concerns trade barriers specific to France.

Enforcement of complex technical standards and lengthy testing procedures sometimes appears to exceed reasonable requirement levels needed to assure proper performance and safety, for example in the areas of electronics, telecommunications equipment, and agriculture phyto-sanitary standards. There has been progress towards removal of non-tariff barriers in trade with France and other EU countries under WTO agreements and in the context of the transatlantic dialogue, and toward harmonization of standards through mutual recognition agreements (MRAs).

The 1989 EU Broadcast Directive requiring a "majority proportion" of television programming to be of European origin was incorporated into French legislation on January 21, 1992. France specifies a percentage of European programming (60 percent) and French programming (40 percent). These broadcast quotas were approved by the EU Commission and became effective on July 1, 1992. They are less stringent than France's previous quota provisions, which required that 60 percent of all broadcasts be of EU origin, and that 50 percent be originally produced in French. The 60 percent European/40 percent French quotas are applicable throughout the day, as well as during prime time slots. The prime time rules go beyond the requirements of the EU Broadcast Directive and limit market access for U.S. programs. Nevertheless, the market share of U.S. films and television shows remains high. Similar quotas affect radio broadcasting as well.

Under legislation enacted in the early 1990s, the French government requires non-EU lawyers to qualify as "avocats," on the basis of full-fledged membership in the French bar. Legal consulting service providers in foreign and international law are required to be licensed in French law. Non-EU firms are not permitted to establish branch offices in France under their own names. Also, foreign lawyers and firms are not permitted to form partnerships with or hire French lawyers. Furthermore, the professional category of "legal consultant" no longer exists in France.

Concerning accounting services, there is a nationality requirement for establishment, which can be waived at the discretion of the French authorities. However, an applicant for such a permit must have lived in France for at least five years.

Import Requirements and Documentation

Import Licenses

The Integrated Tariff of the Community, referred to as TARIC (acronym for "Tarif Intégré de la Communauté"), is designed to show various rules applying to specific products being imported into the customs territory of the EU or, in some cases, when exported from it. To determine if a license is required for a particular product, check the TARIC.

The TARIC can be searched by country of origin, Harmonized System (HS) Code, and product description on the interactive website of the Directorate-General for Taxation and the Customs Union. The TARIC is updated annually.

In addition, many EU Member States maintain their own list of goods subject to import licensing. For example, Germany's "Import List" (Einfuhrliste) includes goods for which licenses are required, their code numbers, any applicable restrictions, and the agency that will issue the relevant license. The Import List also indicates whether the license is required under German or EU law. For information relevant to Member State import licenses, please consult the relevant Member State Country Commercial Guide.

Import Documentation

Non-agricultural Documentation

The official model for written declarations to customs under "Normal Procedure" is the Single Administrative Document (SAD). European Free Trade Association (EFTA) countries including Norway, Iceland, Switzerland, and Liechtenstein also use the SAD. However, other forms may be used for this purpose. Information on import/export forms is contained in Title VII, of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2454/93, which lays down provisions for the implementation of Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2913/92 establishing the Community Customs Code (Articles 205 through 221). Articles 222 through 224 provide for computerized customs declarations and Articles 225 through 229 provide for oral declarations.

Goods brought into the customs territory of the Community are, from the time of their entry, subject to customs supervision until customs formalities are completed. Goods presented to customs are covered by a summary declaration, which is lodged once the goods have been presented to customs. The customs authorities may, however, allow a period for lodging the declaration, which cannot be extended beyond the first working day following the day on which the goods are presented to customs. The summary declaration can be made on a form corresponding to the model prescribed by the customs authorities. However, the customs authorities may permit the use, as a summary declaration, of any commercial or official document that contains the particulars necessary for identification of the goods. It is encouraged that the summary declaration be made in computerized form.

The summary declaration is to be lodged by the person who brought the goods into the customs territory of the Community or by any person who assumes responsibility for carriage of the goods following such entry; or the person in whose name the person referred to above acted. Non-EU goods presented to customs must be assigned a customs-approved treatment or use authorized for such non-Community goods. Where goods are covered by a summary declaration, the formalities for them to be assigned a customs-approved treatment or use must be carried out:

In France, import and export transactions exceeding euros 12,500 in value must be conducted through an approved banking intermediary. Goods must be imported/exported no later than six months after all financial and customs arrangements have been completed. For products originating in countries other than EU member states or participants in the World Trade Organization (WTO), and for a limited number of products considered to be sensitive, a specific import/export license may be required by product or by category of products. Otherwise, the following documents are required to import into France: Shipping Documents, Commercial Invoice, Bill of Lading or Air Waybill, Certificate of Origin.

Temporary Entry

Samples and Carnets: Samples with no intended commercial value enter France free of duties and taxes. When sending such samples parcel post, the sender must specify what types of samples are being shipped. "No commercial value" should be written on the appropriate shipping documents. In order for samples of commercial value to enter France duty-free and tax-free, a bond or deposit of the total amount of duties and taxes must be arranged. Samples must be re-exported within one year if the deposit is to be recouped. An alternative to placing such a deposit is applying for an ATA Carnet.

An ATA carnet is a special international customs document designed to simplify and streamline customs entry procedures for merchandise into participating countries for up to one year. The initials "ATA" are an abbreviation of the French and English words "Admission Temporaire" and "Temporary Admission." Customs authorities in the United States and France accept carnets as a guarantee that all customs duties and excise taxes will be paid if any of the items covered by the carnet are not re-exported within the time period allowed. Carnets may be used for commercial samples, professional equipment, and goods destined for exhibitions and fairs.

Labeling and Marking Requirements

U.S. firms entering the French market are strongly advised to examine EU as well as French laws. Each European Union country is integrating the rulings of the EU into its national legislation. As much legislation regarding labeling is still in the developmental stage, EU labeling regulations and standards need to be carefully monitored. Manufacturers should be mindful that, in addition to the EU's mandatory and voluntary schemes, French voluntary labeling schemes might still apply. These schemes may be highly appreciated by consumers, and thus, become unavoidable for marketing purposes. Labeling in France serves an increasingly informational and even promotional role. Labels often act as "silent salespeople," especially due to the recent growth of large retail stores offering little sales assistance.

Standards

Products tested and certified in the United States to American standards are likely to have to be retested and re-certified to EU requirements as a result of the EU's different approach to the protection of the health and safety of consumers and the environment. Where products are not regulated by specific EU technical legislation, they are always subject to the EU's General Product Safety Directive as well as to possible additional national requirements.

European Union standards created under the New Approach are harmonized across the 25 EU Member States and European Economic Area countries to allow for the free flow of goods. A feature of the New Approach is CE marking. While harmonization of EU legislation can facilitate access to the EU Single Market, manufacturers should be aware that Regulations and technical standards might also function as barriers to trade if U.S. standards are different from those of the European Union.

The French standards body, AFNOR, conducts technical work within major standardization programs (GPN). The combined whole is coordinated by the Steering Programming Committee (COP). A Strategic Committee (CoS) consisting of the principal decision-makers of the relevant economic sector pilots each program, except for the GPN on Fundamental Standards. The CoS is responsible for defining the priorities, participating in the search for funding, distributing the latter and ensuring adequacy between the resources and the adopted programs.

Conformity Assessment

Conformity Assessment is a mandatory step for the manufacturer in the process of complying with specific EU legislation. The purpose of conformity assessment is to ensure consistency of compliance during all stages of the production process to facilitate acceptance of the final product. EU product legislation gives manufacturers some choice with regard to conformity assessment, depending on the level of risk involved in the use of their product. These range from self-certification, type examination and production quality control system, to full quality assurance system.

Product Certification

To sell products on the EU market of 25 Member States as well as Norway, Liechtenstein and Iceland, U.S. exporters are required to apply CE marking whenever their product is covered by specific product legislation. CE marking product legislation offers manufacturers a number of choices and requires decisions to determine which safety/health concerns need to be addressed, which conformity assessment module is best suited to the manufacturing process, and whether or not to use EU-wide harmonized standards. There is no easy way for U.S. exporters to understand and go through the process of CE marking, but hopefully this section provides some background and clarification.

Products manufactured to standards adopted by CEN, CENELEC and ETSI, and published in the Official Journal as harmonized standards, are presumed to conform to the requirements of EU Directives. The manufacturer then applies the CE marking and issues a declaration of conformity. With these, the product will be allowed to circulate freely within the EU. A manufacturer can choose not to use the harmonized EU standards, but then must demonstrate that the product meets the essential safety and performance requirements. Trade barriers occur when design, rather than performance, standards are developed by the relevant European standardization organization, and when U.S. companies do not have access to the standardization process through a European presence.

The CE marking addresses itself primarily to the national control authorities of the Member States, and its use simplifies the task of essential market surveillance of regulated products. Although CE marking is intended primarily for inspection purposes by Member State inspectors, the consumer may well perceive it as a quality mark.

The CE marking is not intended to include detailed technical information on the product, but there must be enough information to enable the inspector to trace the product back to the manufacturer or the authorized representative established in the EU. This detailed information should not appear next to the CE marking, but rather on the declaration of conformity, the certificate of conformity (which the manufacturer or authorized agent must be able to provide at any time, together with the product's technical file), or the documents accompanying the product.

Accreditation

Independent certification bodies, known as notified bodies, have been officially accredited by competent authorities to test and certify to EU requirements. However, under U.S.-EU Mutual Recognition Agreements (MRAs), notified bodies based in the United States and referred to as conformity assessment bodies, are allowed to test in the United States to EU specifications, and vice versa. The costs are significantly lower which results in U.S. products becoming more competitive. At this time, the U.S.-EU MRAs cover the following sectors: EMC (in force), RTTE (in force), medical devices (in transition), pharmaceutical (on hold), recreational craft (in force) and marine equipment (in force). The U.S. Department of Commerce, National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST), has a link on its website to American and European Conformity Assessment bodies operating under a mutual recognition agreement. Accreditation is handled at Member State level.

The Investment Climate

Ensuring that France's investment climate is attractive to foreign investors is a stated priority for the French government, which sees foreign investment as a way to create jobs and stimulate growth. The 2005 debate in France over "economic patriotism" caused some observers to question the depth of this commitment. Nevertheless, investment regulations are simple, and a range of financial incentives for foreign investors are available. A public and commercial establishment, the French Agency for International Investment (Agence Française pour les Investissements Internationaux – AFII) integrates all offices responsible for promoting investment in France. The agency combines the overseas offices of the Invest in France Agencies (IFA), with the Invest in France Network (IFN) association.

Foreign investors say they are attracted to France by its skilled and productive labor force, good infrastructure, technology, and central location in Europe. EU membership, which mandates the free (with certain limitations) movement of people, services, capital and goods across the European Union, took on even greater significance with the introduction of Euro coins and bills in January 2002. However, despite considerable economic reform and market liberalization over the past decade, U.S. and foreign companies often point to high payroll and income taxes, over-regulation, rigid labor markets and occasional negative attitudes toward foreign investors as disincentives to investing in France.

The Formal Investment Regime

The formal French investment regime remains among the least restrictive in the world. While there is no generalized screening of foreign investment, legislation passed at the end of 2005 dictates that acquisitions, irrespective of size or nationality, involving "sensitive" sectors are subject to prior approval by the Finance Minister. For investors from non-EU countries (or those who are not members of the European Common Market that have signed an administrative convention with France), protected sectors include: gambling activities, private security services, research, development or production of chemical or biological medicines, equipment for intercepting communications or eavesdropping, security services for computer systems, dual-use (civil and military) technologies; cryptology, firms that are repositories of defense secrets, firms that research, produce and sell military equipment, and lastly any other industry supplying the defense ministry any of the goods or services described above. The EU Commission has said it would study the December 2005 decree to ensure it is consistent with European Community law.

The decree also changes the triggers for Government of France (GOF) investment scrutiny for firms in the sensitive sectors. The prior decree required the GOF to review a proposed investment if it was above the threshold of 33% of the outstanding shares or voting rights. Now, the decree states that any investment that grants control of a firm, or surpasses the 33% threshold, or involves any part of any branch of any firm that has established headquarters in France, is subject to GOF review.

Authorities also consider the place of residence rather than the nationality of a potential investor. The place of residence of a corporate investor is determined by the location of its owners, without regard to place of incorporation. While firms owned or controlled by American citizens that are legal residents in an EU country will usually be considered as EU residents, France will normally consider firms established or incorporated in other EU countries, and owned or controlled by American residents as non-EU residents.

To determine if non-EU investors control a firm, the French government looks at the residency of the headquarters ("siege social") and the ability of non-EU investors to veto key management decisions or commercial ties (such as loans, guarantees, options, licenses, or contracts) that might effectively make the French company dependent on foreign investors.

Informal Impediments to Foreign Investors

The January 1, 1999 introduction of the Euro as the single currency of the European Monetary Union (EMU), including France, has increased the competitive pressures on France to improve its domestic business and investment climate in order to promote growth and create new jobs. In addition, France has responded to a more competitive international investment climate by implementing some market-oriented economic reforms that increase the attractiveness of the French economy to foreign investors, and by offering a variety of investment incentives. Foreign investors also say they are attracted to France by its central location in Europe, highly skilled labor force, and good infrastructure. France is closing the gap with the U.S. and some other European countries in personal computer use and Internet access.

Yet, while today's foreign investors face less interference than before, after more than a decade of reforms, France has not entirely overcome a traditional preference for state intervention and a sometimes-reflexive opposition to foreign investment. In some cases, this can be seen in labor organization opposition to acquisitions of French businesses by U.S. firms, often reflecting a perception that U.S. firms focus on short-term profits at the expense of employment. In other cases, French firms have stated a preference for working with French and European rather than U.S. firms. A degree of opaqueness in the privatization process (see below) can also aggravate suspicions about the equal treatment of foreign investors in publicly held firms.

The process of deregulation is far from complete and the state remains very involved in economic life. There is extensive regulation of business and labor markets. Also, the corporate tax rates are high in comparison to other leading industrial countries. Foreign investors most often cite complicated and pervasive labor regulation, high income and payroll taxes as the greatest disincentives to investing in France. In the case of labor market regulation, the impact on companies of the 35-hour legal workweek is mixed. Many companies used the transition to the 35-hour workweek as an opportunity to negotiate work-hour annualization programs with employees that allow for greater labor flexibility. Companies also benefited from a further cut in payroll taxes on low wages. On the negative side, the 35-hour workweek increased unit labor costs since total wages remained unchanged even though the number of hours worked declined.

In making its decision on raising the minimum wage an average of 3.05% (effective July 2006), the Government sought to increase purchasing power and stimulate household consumption. Despite the increase in the minimum wage, base gross wages in the private sector are expected to increase at the same rate compared with last year (2.8%) as the high unemployment rate restrains wage demands.

The government decision to apply income tax cuts in 2007 should benefit the French economy, making France a more attractive place for both French and foreign investment. Tax rates became a campaign issue before the 2007 presidential elections, and are likely to continue to divide politicians across the political spectrum.

The French have two social security taxes, the "Contribution Sociale Generalisee" (CSG) and the "Contribution au Remboursement de la Dette Sociale" (CRDS). U.S. contributors to the U.S. Social Security system do not pay these taxes. (Based on the "May 2 2001-377 ordonnance" to apply the 1408/71 EEC regulation, only "individuals who are subject to income taxes in France and contribute to the French social security system including health insurance pay CSG and CRDS". The related "circulaire d'application" was published in the May 20, 2001 "Bulletin Officiel du Travail, de l'Emploi et de la Formation Professionnelle".

On December 8, 2004, the United States amended the income tax convention between the United States and France to avoid double taxation and prevent fiscal evasion; along with the estate and gift tax convention. In December 2005, the French government ratified the two amendments, and they entered into force on December 21, 2006. The provisions resolve problems related to the double taxation of partnerships and estates. The U.S..

French Government Participation in R&D Programs

Total annual R&D expenditures in France represent 2.13 percent of GDP (2005 figures). The French government (GOF) contributes 0.81 percent of GDP to R&D and the industrial sector 1.32 percent. The GOF decided to increase public spending for research by an additional one billion euros annually from 2005 to 2007. The GOF confirmed in 2006 its intent to increase total R&D spending to 3 percent of GDP by 2010 (consistent with the EU's "Lisbon agenda" goals), with two percent coming from the private sector. The French government relies on increased tax credits and incentives for the development of new investment structures to boost industrial research.

The GOF completed in 2006 an ambitious effort to reform its R&D strategy, organization, evaluation, and funding. The new system attempts to inculcate competition for government-funded research and embrace the university system. The Research and Innovation Bill, adopted in April 2006, reinforces science-industry relations and promotes greater strategic direction. The new legislation provides for a High Council for Science and Technology, a National Research Agency, numerous "competitiveness clusters," and an Industrial Innovation Agency. Private enterprise will benefit from more flexible working arrangements with government scientists, as well as by receiving R&D tax incentives. The GOF also supports partnerships between public research agencies and universities within the framework of "Research and Higher Education Hubs," and "Advanced Research Thematic Foundations," two new types of cooperation.

The GOF sponsors R&D and technology development programs at three different levels:

1. International/European programs (e.g. ESA, CERN, EUREKA, EU Framework program);
2. Technology development programs in the private sector (approx. 45 percent of R&D expenditures are funded by the French government), with specific programs to encourage transfer of research and to aid small and medium firms; and
3. National research programs (mostly administered by the Research Ministry), with specific emphasis given to health and biotech (fight against cancer, research on aging and handicaps, focus on new epidemics, genomics/genetics); resource management (including food resources, food safety, water management), sustainable development and the fight against greenhouse gases (research on new sources of energy, clean vehicles, energy storage and use of hydrogen, nuclear systems and nuclear fusion); information and communication technologies; nanotechnologies; and space.

Visas, Work Requirements

The government of France requires that foreign citizens complete extensive procedures if they wish to work in France. The requirements are essentially the same whether foreign citizens work for French or foreign-controlled firms. Non-EU nationals who intend to work or conduct any commercial activity in France must receive a long-term visa and a work permit (Carte de travail) or business permit (Carte de commerçant - foreign trader's card) before establishing residence in France. Information can be obtained from French consulates in the United States. In addition, a foreigner's ability to practice a profession may be curtailed by government regulation and the regulations of French professional associations. For example, lawyers seeking to practice in France must become members of the French bar before they can practice any type of law under their own names. This requires passing the bar examination in French. A number of legislative changes to these regulations are under consideration.

Conversion and Transfer Policies

All inward and outward payments must be made through approved banking intermediaries by bank transfers. There is no restriction on repatriation of capital. Similarly, there are no restrictions on transfers of profits, interest, royalties, or service fees. Foreign-controlled French businesses are required to have a resident French bank account and are subject to the same regulations as other French legal entities. The use of foreign bank accounts by residents is permitted.

France has little effective foreign exchange control regulation. For exchange control purposes, the French government considers foreigners as residents from the time they arrive in France. French and foreign citizens are subject to the same rules. Residents are entitled to open an account in foreign currency with a bank established in France and to establish accounts abroad. Residents must report the account number for all foreign accounts on their annual income tax returns. French-source earnings may be transferred abroad.

As part of the international effort to combat money laundering and the financing of terrorism, France's banking regulations have undergone several changes, which affect the handling of checks, as recommended by the Financial Action Task Force. Additional changes are expected. France sometimes uses its powers under national law to freeze assets of terrorists, operating within EU structures.

Performance Requirements and Incentives

Investment Incentives

France offers a range of financial incentives to foreign investors. France's domestic planning and investment promotion agency, DATAR (Delegation a l'Amenagement du Territoire et a l'Action Regionale) was renamed DIACT (Delegation Interministerielle a l'Amenagement et la Competitivite des Territoires) in December 2005. It has a broad mandate, including increasing the "attractiveness" of France for foreign investors and assisting potential investors. In addition, financial subsidies and tax incentives are offered at the local, regional and national government level to attract investment to France's less affluent areas. Incentives are available equally to French and foreign investors and eligibility requirements are the same.

Within the French government, foreign investment promotion is the responsibility of the AFII "Invest in France Mission" headed by an ambassador-at-large, who is based at the Ministry of the Economy, and backed up by DIACT. DIACT maintains offices throughout France and around the world to seek out and advise potential investors on project development, site selection, investment incentives (the largest of which are administered by DIACT) and administrative and legal requirements. DIACT's overseas offices were re-named "Invest in France Agencies" (IFA -- IFANA in North America) in 2001.

The primary investment incentive offered through DIACT is the Prime d'Amenagement du Territoire (PAT). DATAR has revised downward the PAT program at the European Commission's request. Nonetheless, PAT incentives remain generous for investment in disadvantaged zones (parts of north and central France, and Corsica). The government defined a new list of eligible zones for the 2007-2013 period. The current PAT system requires job creation from investors (see Performance Requirements), but its subsidies can be generous. PAT may also be collected by firms that maintain employment when the investment is significant. The system is even more flexible for small and medium sized companies. New rules will be issued when the European Commission gives its approval. Other investment incentives may also be available. Potential investors should consult DIACT and AFII to determine the full range of possibilities, including:

- Research and development project grants, notably for businesses located in competitiveness clusters
- Special tax treatment for company headquarters
- Local and regional tax holidays and special subsidies
- "Industrial conversion" zones featuring tax breaks and grants for job-creation
- Special access to credit for small and medium-sized enterprises
- Assistance for training, including a portion of wages paid to employees in training.

Besides DIACT/IFA at the national level, several French cities and regions have developed their own investment promotion agencies that advise potential investors, offer administrative assistance, and oversee investment incentives. The February 2002 Local Democracy Law ("Democratie de proximite" gives regional councils ("Conseils Regionaux") full powers to establish (without decree or national convention) schemes for direct aid to companies (subsidies, reduced interest rates on loans, and advances). Each "Conseil Regional" has its own website, which can be found with any internet search engine using "conseil regional" and the name of the appropriate region.

Performance Requirements

Other than those linked to incentives, there are no mandatory performance requirements established by law. However, the French government will generally require commitments regarding employment or research and development from both foreign and domestic investors seeking government financial incentives. For example, to be eligible for DIACT grants, the French government usually requires that firms, whether owned by EU or non-EU residents, create a minimum of 15 jobs within the first three years. As noted above, PAT and R&D subsidies are based on the number of jobs created. In addition, the authorities have occasionally sought commitments as part of the approval process for acquisitions by foreign investors.

Nonetheless, foreign firms need the French government's approval on a variety of regulatory issues, and in France, officials generally have much wider discretion than their U.S. counterparts. This can leave firms subject to "unwritten" performance requirements, with regulatory officials making it known that a firm's request would be more favorably viewed if it increased employment, R&D, or exports.

Of most concern to foreign companies has been standards setting. With standards different from those in the U.S., rigorous testing and approval procedures must sometimes be undertaken before goods can be sold in France. Where EU-wide standards do not exist, specific French standards apply. The United States and the EU have negotiated mutual recognition agreements covering the testing and certification of certain specified regulated products.

Industry associations have an influential role in developing both government policies and influencing self-regulatory organizations. U.S. firms may find it useful to become members of local industry groups. Experience has shown that even "observer" status can offer U.S. firms an insight into new investment opportunities and greater access to government-sponsored projects, even if U.S. firms sometimes feel they are not always given an adequate opportunity to participate in the determination of regulations.

Efficient Capital Markets and Portfolio Investment

Access to Capital and Capital Markets

France has an open financial market that allows firms easy access to a variety of financial products in both French and international markets. As markets expand, foreign and domestic portfolio investment has become increasingly important. France continues to modernize its marketplace, introducing tax-advantaged retirement funds in 2004. Facing the prospect of increasingly tough competition with other European marketplaces following the introduction of the Euro, French financial markets are continually updating and adapting their products, procedures and services.

France is actively involved in the effort to create a system of internationally accepted accounting standards. Most EU listed companies were required to use international accounting standards from 2005. French market and banking regulators enhanced and developed cooperation with their foreign counterparts. Some aspects of French legal, regulatory and accounting systems may not be as transparent as U.S. systems, but they are consistent with international norms.

Commercial banks offer all classic financing instruments, including short, medium, and long-term loans, short-and medium-term credit facilities, and secured and non-secured overdrafts. Commercial banks also assist in public offerings of shares and corporate debt, mergers, acquisitions and takeovers. Banks offer hedging services against interest rate and currency fluctuations. France has 161 foreign banks including 57 non-EU banks (some with sizable branch networks) with total assets accounting for around 10% of total bank assets at the end of 2005. Foreign companies have access to all banking services. Although some subsidies are available for home mortgages and small business financing, most loans are provided at market rates. Increasingly, firms in France are bypassing banks and going directly to financial markets for their financing needs.

Mergers and Acquisitions

Although French laws regarding takeovers do not discriminate against foreign investors, a hostile takeover in France by a foreign investor could face public and even official scrutiny. Provisions of the company takeover law are designed to limit hostile takeovers of publicly traded companies. For example, with the new regulation, passed by the Parliament on December 15, 2005, stockholders are required to notify company management and AMF when they have decided to prepare a takeover. France extended its public offering rules by imposing some additional obligations on investors taking control of a company listed on a French market depending on the level of voting rights in the targeted company and the nature of the proposed acquisition.

In transposing the European takeover directive, France has tried to reconcile its objectives of reestablishing its credentials as an investor-friendly country, while allowing companies to defend themselves against "predators." French companies may suspend implementation of a takeover if they are targeted by a foreign company that does not apply reciprocal rules. The government also introduced an amendment allowing a U.S.-style "poison pill" takeover defense, including granting existing shareholders and employees the right to increase their leverage by buying more shares through stock purchase warrants ("bons de souscription d'actions - BSA") at a discount in case of an unwanted takeover. New provisions include a reform of AMF supervisory procedures. Procedures cover declaration of conformity, offer price, declaration of a bid in relation to takeover rumors and nomination of an independent appraiser when conflicts of interests exist..

Bilateral Investment Agreements

U.S. investment in France is subject to the provisions of the Convention on Establishment between the United States of America and France, which was signed in 1959 and is still in force. Some of the rights it provides to U.S. nationals and companies include:

- The right to be treated like domestic nationals in all types of commercial activities including the right to establish offices and acquire majority control of French firms, and in obtaining and maintaining patent and trademarks. (This right does not apply to firms involved in communications, air transportation, water transportation, banking, the exploitation of natural resources, certain "professions," and the production of electricity) ;
- The right to receive the best treatment accorded to either domestic nationals and companies or third country nationals and companies with respect to transferring funds between France and the U.S.;
- The requirement that property may only be expropriated for a public purpose and that payment must be just, realizable and prompt.

Labor

France's private sector labor force is one of the country's strongest points in attracting foreign investment, combining high quality with relatively competitive unit-wage costs compared with those of other industrialized countries. The labor code sets minimum standards for working conditions including the workweek, layoffs, overtime, vacation and personal leave. In October 2006, the GOF drafted a bill on "Social Dialogue" which, if approved by Parliament, would call for mandatory preliminary negotiations between French employee and employers' unions prior to any modification of the Labor Code. The bill could be adopted by the end of February 2007.

France recently adopted an employees' shareholding law ("Loi sur la Participation"), which involves some changes in the labor code. The law encourages the purchase of shares by employees, employees' savings accounts, and better representation of employees as shareholders. Employees in large companies who are laid off for economic reasons may benefit from "mobility leave" which involves training, short-term contracts, or transfer to another company within a pole of competitiveness. A new "transport allowance" will benefit employees who commute using public or private transportation.

Other labor standards are contained in collective agreements, which are usually negotiated by sector on a national or regional basis by the various trade union federations and employers' associations. French absenteeism is modest by European standards, and in the private sector peaceful labor relations generally prevail.

While the rate of unionization in France has steadily declined to a little more than half that of the United States, French labor law provides an extensive institutional role for employee representatives and for organized labor.

-- In companies with more than 10 employees, employee delegates are elected for a one-year term. They are authorized to present individual or collective claims and grievances relating to working conditions, to inform government labor inspectors of any complaints under the labor law, and to concur with management in any reorganization of the workweek. Management is required to meet with employee delegates at least monthly.

-- A company with more than 50 employees must have a joint management/employee enterprise committee, to which employee representatives are elected. The committee must be consulted for all major corporate decisions, but has no veto. The enterprise committee must be provided with the same information that is made available to shareholders. It is funded by the company at a rate equal to at least 0.2 percent of the firm's payroll, and uses this money to finance social and cultural activities for the benefit of employees.

-- Workers also hold most slots on occupational health and safety committees, which are mandatory in medium and large size companies. Labor tribunals (playing a role largely equivalent to the NLRB in resolving labor disputes) are comprised of equal numbers of union and employer representatives. Appeals are possible to the level of the "Cour de Cassation," one of France's high courts.

Due to a variety of macro and microeconomic factors, including high payroll taxes, a high minimum wage, and rigid labor laws, French businesses tend to use less labor-intensive procedures and rely more on labor saving technology than businesses in other countries. This is one reason for France's high unemployment rate.

Foreign-Trade Zones/Free Ports

France is subject to all European Union free trade zone regulations and arrangements. These allow member countries to designate portions of their customs territory as free trade zones and free warehouses in return for commitments in favor of employment. France has taken advantage of these regulations in several specific instances. The French Customs Service administers these zones and can provide more details. France has designated 85 trade zones, including 14 new zones in 2006. In addition, the French government has renewed the tax exemption program for five years, until December 31, 2011, in the existing urban "enterprise zones" (Zones Franches Urbaines). Since January 2004, all such zones benefited from tax exemptions on corporate tax, payroll taxes, professional tax and real estate tax.

In March 2006, the government approved 66 competitiveness clusters including 10 for projects with international ties and 6 with related missions. Poles are designed to reinforce innovation and encourage innovative businesses to remain in France. They will benefit from income and social tax exemptions. Clusters involved in research and innovation will also benefit from financial support from the state-owned investment bank Caisse des Depots.

ICC is the world business organization and a leading advocate of the benefits of globalization - convinced that international trade and the investment and the market economy system are powerful forces for peace and prosperity.

ICC is also an official business interlocutor to the United Nations, has close working relationship with the World Trade Organization and meets regularly with government leaders and heads of state around the world.

Global influence is further exerted through a network of national committees. These national organizations, representing business in the major trading nations and most developing countries and transition economies, have direct access to key players in their national governments.

In addition, ICC formulates voluntary rules by which business is conducted everyday. Although these rules are voluntary, they are observed in countless thousands of transactions every day and have become part of the fabric of international trade. ICC also provides essential services, foremost among them the ICC International Court of Arbitration. Another service is the World Chambers Federation (WCF), ICC's worldwide network of chambers of commerce, fostering interaction and exchange of chamber best practice.

FIN at the service of French marine industry professionals.

The French Nautical Industries Federation's mission is to defend, represent and promote all business sectors comprising French nautical industries, both at home and abroad. It brings together all those professions and trades that contribute to the development and practice of boating and water sports, and currently numbers more than 800 members. Ranging from industrial operations to the tourist industry, all branches of the marine industry are brought together within eight "sectors", which represent over 80% of the industries' turnover: builders, equipment manufacturers, superyacht, maritime and waterways charters, engine manufacturers, trade and maintenance, service providers, outdoors and surfing sports.

The Foch Foundation was founded in 1929 by prominent French and American citizens with funding mostly from Americans. The Board of Directors is made up of American and French members. The Foch Foundation is a private non-profit Franco-American organization. It was created to build and maintain a hospital of international reputation and give, if necessary, financial support to needy patients.

Hôpital Foch is located in Suresnes and faces the Paris Bois de Boulogne. Today it represents 680 bed surgical and medical facility, staffed by 1700 professional employees and 200 doctors and surgeons. A majority is bilingual and trained to offer extensive services to the American community.

Hôpital Foch is fully accredited and one of the first private medical institutions of Europe. It uses very sophisticated equipments to improve its standards of Excellence. It has been able to raise 140 million euros in order to complete a full programme of refurbishing including the construction of a new building which will be ready in 2009-2010.

The Foundation after having financed the "ambulatory pulmonary rehabilitation center" which now is in full activity, has decided to centre its next fund-raising campaign on the acquisition of a new imaging system (PET/CT imaging).

Angel Gurría
Secretary General

The OECD is a unique forum where the governments of 30 market democracies work together to address the economic, social and governance challenges of globalisation. The OECD also shares its expertise and exchanges views with more than 70 other countries, as well as representatives of civil society. The Organisation is one of the world's largest and most reliable sources of comparable statistical, economic and social data. OECD databases span areas as diverse as national accounts, economic indicators, trade, employment, migration, education, energy, and health. The OECD uses this wealth of information to help governments foster prosperity and fight poverty by achieving economic growth and financial stability. It plays a prominent role in fostering good governance in the public service and in corporate activity. It provides analysis and advice on trade and investment, technology, innovation, entrepreneurship and development co-operation. It is helping to ensure that the environmental implications of economic and social development are taken into account. Sharing the benefits of growth is also crucial, as shown in activities involving emerging economies, as well as in work on sustainable development and aid policy. The OECD's members are: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Czech Republic, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Korea, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Portugal, Slovak Republic, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom and United States.

A member of the Anglican Communion, The American Cathedral serves a diverse parish. Not only is the Cathedral a "home away from home" for Americans, it also includes parishioners from France and many countries around the world. In addition to Sunday School and Youth Groups, the Cathedral offers choral and fellowship groups, and cultural and social outreach activities for all ages. The Cathedral, also a historic monument, was consecrated on Thanksgiving Day, 1886. Designed by prominent British architect George Edmund Street, the neogothic building contains many works of artistic and historical interest. It is a house of prayer and worship, as well as a center for many events of interest to the American and international community.

Montessori School, bilingual French/English, multi-cultural, for children ages 3 to 6 years old. School and Montessori certified teachers recognized by the Association Montessori France. Teachers are bilingual and native speakers. This method and the focus on the "whole child" facilitates the child's natural desire to discover, learn and develop independence, creativity, autonomy, self confidence and esteem, respect for self and others, and personal empowerment. The school is equipped with an extensive selection of Montessori learning materials, a large library of English and French books, and a computer. Activities include pottery, sculpture, music, gardening, caring for animals, observation of nature, and school field trips.

Pilar Cabeza de Vaca
Head of School

The purpose of the American School of Paris is to provide an American model of education to an international community. Its mission is to develop life-long learners who use their social, thinking and problem-solving skills to contribute to a global society. The school combines an education based on a current American curriculum with the cultural and language advantages of the School's immediate surroundings and its ready access to the rest of Europe. English is the language of instruction, while strong emphasis is placed on French, which is required at all grade levels. The International Baccalaureat Diploma is offered additionally in grades 11 and 12. The school is located on a 12-acre campus, with extensive bus service, two gymnasiums, science laboratories, computer laboratories, media centers and a Performing Arts Center.

2007 French and American Holidays

(Embassy of the United States, Paris, France : www.amb-usa.fr/embassy/holidays.htm)

In 1971, the dates of many federal holidays were officially moved to the nearest Monday by then-President Richard Nixon.

There are four holidays which are not necessarily celebrated on Mondays : Thanksgiving, New Year's Day, Independence Day, Christmas.

When New Year's Day, Independence Day, or Christmas falls on a Sunday, the next day is also a holiday. When one of these holidays falls on a Saturday, the previous day is also a holiday.

Federal government offices, including the post office, are always closed on all federal legal holidays.

Schools and businesses close on major holidays like Independence Day and Christmas but may not always be closed, for example, on George Washington's birthday or Veteran's Day.

| 2007 | Day | Holiday | F/A |
|------------|-----------|-------------------------------|-----------------|
| Jan. 1 | Monday | New Year's Day | American/French |
| January 15 | Monday | Martin Luther King's Birthday | American |
| Feb. 19 | Monday | President's Day | American |
| April 9 | Monday | Easter Monday | French |
| May 1 | Tuesday | Labor Day | French |
| May 8 | Tuesday | Veteran's Day | French |
| May 17 | Thursday | Ascension Day | French |
| May 28 | Monday | Memorial Day | American |
| July 4 | Wednesday | Independence Day | American |
| July 14 | Saturday | French National Day | French |
| Aug. 15 | Wednesday | Assumption Day | French |
| Sept. 3 | Monday | Labor Day | American |
| Oct. 8 | Monday | Columbus Day | American |
| Nov. 1 | Thursday | All Saints' Day | French |
| Nov. 11 | Sunday* | Veterans' Day | American/French |
| Nov. 22 | Thursday | Thanksgiving | American |
| Dec. 25 | Thursday | Christmas | American/French |

* To be observed on the following Monday
